Samp of Brucker-Mubl, near Redecker, upon the Ohme, Stpt. 24
A BOUT Six in the Morning of the 21st, the Weather being extremely foggy, the Enemy attacked the Post the Brucker-Mubl, which they cannonaded, and attacked with Small Arms. On the Fog's clearing up, it was perceived hat they had both Cavalry and Insantry formed on the Height eyond the Bridge. Our Cannon being ready, their Cavalry as cannonaded and dispersed: Their insantry likewise gave any, but were soon supported by fresh Troops. The Cannonade and Fire of Small Arms continued very severe on both ides. In the mean Time, General Waldegrave (who had ken the Command of the Reserve, on Lord Granby's being of a Fever) was ordered to support the Brucker-Muhl. his Succour came just in the proper Time, as the Hanovean Troops had already suffered much, and their Ammunion of every Kind was almost spent. The first Battalion of ritish Guards marched immediately down to relieve them, and the Enemy kept constantly throwing in fresh Troops in little Work which they had beyond the Bridge. Our heavy a Pounders arrived at this Time, and played with great seefs. The Enemy, on their Part, still kept bringing up ore Cannon. The Duke ordered up six heavy 12 Pounders, d 3 Hawitzers from the Army, which arrived just at the me, when, from some of our Guns being disabled; and e growing Scarcity of Ammunition, our Fire began to abate. With Hessian Battalions were likewise ordered up. The Fire e growing Scarcity of Ammunition, our Fire began to abate. ut Hessian Battalions were likewise ordered up. The Fire both Sides was kept up (both of Cannon and Small Arms) h the utmost Severity, and most determined Resolution, dark Night at last put an End to it. There was no Atdark Night at latt put an End to it. There was no Atmpt on either Side, to pass the Bridge; but fresh Troops re sent to support the Posts, which each had on the opte Banks of the River, as sast as the former Reliefs had ended their Ammunition. The whole Affair lasted 14 ars, without one Moment's Intermission. Never did toops bear with more Firmness and Resolution. Our Loss tween 7 and 300 Men in killed and wounded; that of Enemy, by all Accounts, is much greater.

URIOSITY is feldom so powerfully excited, or so amply gratified, as by faithful Relations of Voyages and Travels. The different Appearances of Nature, and the various Customs of Men, the gradual Discovery of the World, and the Accidents and Hardships of a naval Life, all concur to fill the Mind with Expectation and with Wonder; and as Science, when it can be connected with Events, is always more eafily learned, and more certainly remembered, the History of a Voyage may be considered as the most useful Treatise on Geography; fince the Student follows the Traveller from Country to Country, and retains the Situation of Places by recounting his Adventures. It is hoped that this Collection will be favourably received, as none has hitherto been offered so cheap or so commodious.
