CONSTANTINOPLE, November 5.

THE Porte has received advices, that the islands of Bourbon and Isle de France, have thrown off their dependence on the French republic, and forced the republican squadron of admiral Sercy to leave their harbours. This measure is said to proceed from a very active communication between the Isle de France and the commodore of the British Squadron in that quarter, through the medium of captain Lofack, of the ship Jupiter.

"The divan of Constantinople, it is said, have resolved to declare war against the Batavian republic, in which case its efforts in Turkey would meet with the same fate as those of the French. But the latest advices from thence mention no such proceeding."

On the 17th of October, agreeably to orders from admiral Nelson, four English frigates sailed from the harbour of Trapani in Sicily, to reinforce the Squadron before Malta, and sent orders to the Portuguese commodore to bombard that part of the island in the possession of the French. A Danish ship laden with 120 oxen and provisions, and sent by the bey of Tripoli to Malta, was on her return captured by the Portuguese Squadron and carried to Syracuse.
