YHOM A LONDON PAPER -OCT, 14. Copy of a letter from his soyal highest the Crown Prince, to bis majerty the Emperer Napclean.

"As long as your imperial majes ty acted, or caused others to act, against me only, directly, I deemed it proper to oppose to you nothing but calmness or silence; but now, when the note of the Duke of Bassano to M. D'Obson endeavors to throw between the king and me the same firebrand of discord which facilitated to your majesty the entrance in Spain, all ministerial relations have been broken, I address myself directly to you, for the purpose of reminding you of the faithful and open con duct of Sweden, even in the most difficult times.

" The communications which M. Signol was charged to make, by order of your imperial majesty, the king caused it to be replied, that Sweden, convinced that it was only to you, sire, that she owed the loss of Finland, could never believe in your friendship for her, unless you procured Norway to be given to her. to indemnify her for the mischief which your policy had caused her.

" A hundred Swedish ships had been captured and more than 200 seamen put in irons, when this government saw itself compelled to cause a pirate to be seized, who under the French flag, entered our very ports, to carry off our ships, and to insuit our confidence in treaties.

" The Duke of Bassano says, that your mijesty did not provoke the war with Russia; and yet, sire, your majesty passed the Niemen with 400,000 men.

"From the moment when your majesty plunged into the interior of that empire the issue was no longer doubtful. The emperor Alexander and the King, already in the month of Aug. foresaw the termination of the campaign, and its prodigious results. All military combinations seemed to guarantee that 'your majesty would be a prisoner-You escaped that danger, sire; but your army, the flower of France, of Germany, and of Italy, exists no more! There lie unburied the brave men who served France at Fleurus: Frenchmen who conquered in Italy. who survived the burning climate o Egypt, and who fixed victory under your colors at Marengo, at Austerlitz, Jena and Friedlane!

May your soul be softened, sire, at this heart-rending picture; but should it be necessary to complete the effect, recoilert also the death of some more than a million of Frenchmen, lying on the field of honor, victims of the wars which your majesty has undertaken.

"Your majesty invokes your rights to the triendship of the king! Permit me to remind you, sire, of the little value your majesty attached to it, at times when a reciprocity of sentiment would have been very useful to Sweden. When the king, after having lost Finland wrote to your majesty to beg you to preserve for Sweden the Isles of Aland, you replied to him, "apply to the emperor Alexander-he is great and generons;" and to fill up the measure of your indifference, you caused to be inserted in the official journal (Moniteur of the 21st of Sept. 1810) at the moment of my departure for Sweden, that there had been an interregnum in that kingdom, during "The king broke off from the coal ition of 1792, because it was the ob lect of that coalition to partition France, and he would have no hand in the dismemberment of that fine monarchy; he was led to that measure, a monument of his political wisdom, as much by his attachment to the French people, as by a wish to heal the wounds of the kingdom. That wise & virtuous policy, founded on the principle that every nation has a right to govern itself by its own laws, its usages, and its own will, is the very same which regulates him at the present moment.

which the English were carrying or their commerce with impunity.

"Your system, sire, would interdict to nations the exercise of that right which they have received from nature-that of trading with each other, of mutually assisting each other, of corresponding and ving in peace; and yet the very existence of Sweden depends upon an extension of commercial relations, without which she would be insufficient.for her own subsistence.

"Far from perceiving in the conduel of the king any change of system, every enlightened and impartial man will find in it nothing but the continuation of a just and steady poriod when the sovereigns coaleced against the liberties of France; and which is now pursued with energy,

it a time when the Prench government continuer to conspire against the liberty of nations and of sover-

"I know the good dispositions of the emperor Alexander, and of the cabinet of St. James's towards peace the calamities of the continent demand it, and your majesty ought not to spurn it. Possessed of the finest monarchy upon the earth, would you be always extending its limits, and transmit to an arm less powerful than yours, the wretched inheritance of interminable war? Will not your majesty apply yourself to the healing of the wounds inflicted by a revolu tion, of which there is nothing left to France but the recollection of its military glory, and real calamities within its interior? Sire, the lessons of history repel the idea of an umversal monarchy, and the sentiment of independence may be deadened, but cannot be effaced from the heart of nations. May your majesty weigh all these considerations, and at tast really think of that general peace, the prophaned name of which has caused so much blood to flow.

"I was born, sir, in that fine France which you govern; its glory and prosperity can never be indifferent to me; but without ceasing to form wishes for its happiness, I will defend with all the powers of my soul, both the rights of the people who invited me, and the honor of the sovereign who has condescended to call me his son. In this contest between the liberty of the world and oppression. I will say to the Swedes. "I fight foreyou and with you, and the wisnes or all free nations will accompany our efforts."

"In politics, sire, neither friend ship nor hatred has place—there are only duties to fulfil towards the nations whom Providence has summoned us to govern; their laws and their privileges are the blessings which are dear to them ; and if, in order fohreserve them, one is compelled to renounce old connexions and family affections, the prince who wishes to perform his duty can never hesitate which course to adopt.

" The Duke of Bassano announces. that your majesty will avoid the colat of a rupture; but, sire, was it not your majesty who interrupted our commercial relations, by ordering the capture of Swedish vessels in the bosom of peace? Was it not the rigor of your orders which forbid us every kind of communication with the continent for three years, and which, since that period, caused more than 50 Swedish vessels to be detained at Wismar, Rostock, and other ports of the Baltic?

" The Duke of Bassano adds, that your majesty will never change your system, and will consider this as a civil war; which indicates that your majesty means to retain forever Swedish Pomerania, and will not renounce the hope of giving law to Sweden, and thus degrading, without running any risk, the Swedish name and character. By the phrase "civil war," you doubtless mean a war between alites, but we know the fate to which you destined them.

" If the events which have occurred for these four months past have induced you to throw upon your generals the disarming and the sending of the Swedish troops of Pomerania as prisoners of war, into France, i will not be so easy to find a pretext to shew that your majesty never wished to confirm the judgment of the council of prizes; and that you did not make particular exceptions against Sweden, even when that tribunal decided in our favor. Besides, sire, no one in Europe will misunderstand the blame which you throw upon your generals.

"The note of the king's minister for foreign affairs, and the answer which M. de Cabre returned on the 4th of Jan. 1812, will prove to you, sire, that his majesty had even anticipated your wishes by setting at liberty all the crews of the privateers. The government afterwards carried its consideration so far, as to send back Portuguese, Algerines and negroes, who, taken on board the same privateers, called themselves the subjects of your majesty. There could not be the slightest reason, therefore, why your majesty should not have ordered the return of the Swedish officers and soldiers, and yet they still groan under confinement.

With regard to the threats contained in the note of the Duke of Bassano; and the 40,000 men whom your majesty intends giving to Denmark. I do not think it becomes me to enter into discussions on these subjects; and the rather, because I doubt very much, whether the king of Denmark can avail himself of that succor.

" With regard to my personal ambition-it is lofty, Lacknowledge;

it has for its object to serve the cause of humanity, and to secure the independence of the Scandinavian Peninula to attain that end, L'confide in the justice of that cause which the king has commanded me to defend, upon the perseverance of the nation, and the fidelity of its allies.

(Signed) GHARLES JEAN.
