

with the same sentiments, and on the same principles. DECEMBER 1. If contrary to every calculation, and if there should result, from this or any real danger, they will be called to give to the King of France, to the French nation, or to their allies, as soon as the day shall be made, the necessity will to re-establish the tranquility, to make common cause again, those who shall undertake to do it.

The present Declaration, is contained in the Protocol of the Congress convened at Vienna, in the year of the 13th of March 1815, to be made public. Signed at Vienna, 13th March, 1815.

[By all the Plenipotentiaries]

The above document strengthens the determination of the French at Bourdeaux, to establish independent or provisional government in the south, and to hold against Buonaparte. An officer of Buonaparte had arrived at Bourdeaux from Paris, and was arrested and put in prison. All the English were quitting Bourdeaux with effects.

[Louis, the king of France, the 7th March, issued a proclamation declaring that Buonaparte and his accomplices, were traitors and rebels, for having entered into the hand, the department of the French civil and military, to pursue, and to produce immediately, the son of Napoleon Buonaparte, he and his abettors may be dealt with as the law directs.]

The French papers say—The French frigate Le Lys, that sailed from Toulon, has captured three of war and transport vessels, and conveyed Buonaparte and his guard to Frejus.

King Louis, issued a proclamation, dated the 19th of March, saying, that part of the army had betrayed him, but he hoped it would soon acknowledge its errors, and return to its duty. (The King at this time, was quitting his three LATEST.

A letter from Rochelle of the 29th of March, received at Philadelphia, observes, that "We are for a war with England and also all the continent—Buonaparte consolidating his power at Paris, Bourdeaux and Toulouse have declared against him—they are now 5-6th of the nation are for him—Vendee is quits—Massena, at Toulon is in favor of Buonaparte, will preserve the tranquility of Marseilles—vanguard of 20,000 men are marching upon Lise, which place may stand a siege, but the Bourbon family will proceed to England. The communication with Bourdeaux was on the eve of being interrupted. The horizon is—Levies of troops are made—we intend to enter Belgium to fight the English under Wellington—Buonaparte has at his command 150,000 men—all the French are moored in our Road have been sent into our port. It is said British and American war are off our port. We have 44 ships ready; at Toulon 15, some at Rochefort—all the same returned from prison are devoted to Napoleon. Propositions have been made to Germany for the return of Maria Louisa—if Germany remains neutral the rest is not feared, otherwise our condition will be serious."

Supplement to the London Gazette, Tuesday March 7.

Colonial Department, March 9. Downing-st. March 8, 1815.

Despatches of which, the following are copies, have been this day received by Earl Bathurst, one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, from Maj. Gen. Sir John Lambert, K. C. B. commanding the coast of Louisiana.

Camp in front of the enemy's lines, below New Orleans, Jan. 10, 1815. My Lord,

It becomes my duty to lay before your Lordship, the proceedings of the force lately employed on the coast of Louisiana, under the command of Maj. Gen. the Hon. Sir E. Pakenham, K. B. and acting concert with Vice-Adm. the Hon. Sir A. Cochrane K. B.

The report which I inclose to Maj. Gen. Keane, will put your Lordship in possession of the occurrence which took place until the arrival of Maj. Gen. the Hon. Sir E. Pakenham, to assume the command; from that period, I send extracts of the journal of Maj. Gen. rest, assistant-quarter-master, up to the time of the joining of the troops (which fell on the 24th O. J. last under my command) which was on the 6th of Jan.

Gibbs and maj. gen. Keane being born off wounded at the same time, with many other commanding officers, and further, the preparations to aid in crossing the ditch not being so forward as they ought to have been, from, perhaps, the men being wounded who were carrying them, caused a wavering in the column, which in such situation became irreparable; and as I advanced with the reserve, at about 250 yards from the line, I had the mortification to observe the whole falling back upon me in the greatest confusion.

In this situation, finding that no impression had been made, and that many men had reached the ditch, they were either drowned or obliged to surrender, and that it was impossible to restore order in the regiments where they were, I placed the reserve in position, until I could obtain such information as to determine me how to act to the best of my judgment, and whether or not I should resume the attack, and if so, I felt it could be done only by the reserve. The confidence I have in the corps composing it, would have encouraged me greatly, though not without loss, which might have made the attempt of serious consequence, as I know it was the opinion of the late distinguished commander of the forces that the carrying of the first line would not be the least arduous service.

Preparations were made on our

bank of the river, and calls upon all the authorities civil and military, to pursue, and to produce immediately, the son of Napoleon Buonaparte, he and his abettors may be dealt with as the law directs.]

The French papers say—The French frigate Le Lys, that sailed from Toulon, has captured three of war and transport vessels, and conveyed Buonaparte and his guard to Frejus.

King Louis, issued a proclamation, dated the 19th of March, saying, that part of the army had betrayed him, but he hoped it would soon acknowledge its errors, and return to its duty. (The King at this time, was quitting his three LATEST.

A letter from Rochelle of the 29th of March, received at Philadelphia, observes, that "We are for a war with England and also all the continent—Buonaparte consolidating his power at Paris, Bourdeaux and Toulouse have declared against him—they are now 5-6th of the nation are for him—Vendee is quits—Massena, at Toulon is in favor of Buonaparte, will preserve the tranquility of Marseilles—vanguard of 20,000 men are marching upon Lise, which place may stand a siege, but the Bourbon family will proceed to England. The communication with Bourdeaux was on the eve of being interrupted. The horizon is—Levies of troops are made—we intend to enter Belgium to fight the English under Wellington—Buonaparte has at his command 150,000 men—all the French are moored in our Road have been sent into our port. It is said British and American war are off our port. We have 44 ships ready; at Toulon 15, some at Rochefort—all the same returned from prison are devoted to Napoleon. Propositions have been made to Germany for the return of Maria Louisa—if Germany remains neutral the rest is not feared, otherwise our condition will be serious."

Supplement to the London Gazette, Tuesday March 7.

Colonial Department, March 9. Downing-st. March 8, 1815.

Despatches of which, the following are copies, have been this day received by Earl Bathurst, one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, from Maj. Gen. Sir John Lambert, K. C. B. commanding the coast of Louisiana.

Camp in front of the enemy's lines, below New Orleans, Jan. 10, 1815. My Lord,

It becomes my duty to lay before your Lordship, the proceedings of the force lately employed on the coast of Louisiana, under the command of Maj. Gen. the Hon. Sir E. Pakenham, K. B. and acting concert with Vice-Adm. the Hon. Sir A. Cochrane K. B.

The report which I inclose to Maj. Gen. Keane, will put your Lordship in possession of the occurrence which took place until the arrival of Maj. Gen. the Hon. Sir E. Pakenham, to assume the command; from that period, I send extracts of the journal of Maj. Gen. rest, assistant-quarter-master, up to the time of the joining of the troops (which fell on the 24th O. J. last under my command) which was on the 6th of Jan.

Gibbs and maj. gen. Keane being born off wounded at the same time, with many other commanding officers, and further, the preparations to aid in crossing the ditch not being so forward as they ought to have been, from, perhaps, the men being wounded who were carrying them, caused a wavering in the column, which in such situation became irreparable; and as I advanced with the reserve, at about 250 yards from the line, I had the mortification to observe the whole falling back upon me in the greatest confusion.

In this situation, finding that no impression had been made, and that many men had reached the ditch, they were either drowned or obliged to surrender, and that it was impossible to restore order in the regiments where they were, I placed the reserve in position, until I could obtain such information as to determine me how to act to the best of my judgment, and whether or not I should resume the attack, and if so, I felt it could be done only by the reserve. The confidence I have in the corps composing it, would have encouraged me greatly, though not without loss, which might have made the attempt of serious consequence, as I know it was the opinion of the late distinguished commander of the forces that the carrying of the first line would not be the least arduous service.

Preparations were made on our

bank of the river, and calls upon all the authorities civil and military, to pursue, and to produce immediately, the son of Napoleon Buonaparte, he and his abettors may be dealt with as the law directs.]

The French papers say—The French frigate Le Lys, that sailed from Toulon, has captured three of war and transport vessels, and conveyed Buonaparte and his guard to Frejus.

King Louis, issued a proclamation, dated the 19th of March, saying, that part of the army had betrayed him, but he hoped it would soon acknowledge its errors, and return to its duty. (The King at this time, was quitting his three LATEST.

A letter from Rochelle of the 29th of March, received at Philadelphia, observes, that "We are for a war with England and also all the continent—Buonaparte consolidating his power at Paris, Bourdeaux and Toulouse have declared against him—they are now 5-6th of the nation are for him—Vendee is quits—Massena, at Toulon is in favor of Buonaparte, will preserve the tranquility of Marseilles—vanguard of 20,000 men are marching upon Lise, which place may stand a siege, but the Bourbon family will proceed to England. The communication with Bourdeaux was on the eve of being interrupted. The horizon is—Levies of troops are made—we intend to enter Belgium to fight the English under Wellington—Buonaparte has at his command 150,000 men—all the French are moored in our Road have been sent into our port. It is said British and American war are off our port. We have 44 ships ready; at Toulon 15, some at Rochefort—all the same returned from prison are devoted to Napoleon. Propositions have been made to Germany for the return of Maria Louisa—if Germany remains neutral the rest is not feared, otherwise our condition will be serious."

Supplement to the London Gazette, Tuesday March 7.

Colonial Department, March 9. Downing-st. March 8, 1815.

Despatches of which, the following are copies, have been this day received by Earl Bathurst, one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, from Maj. Gen. Sir John Lambert, K. C. B. commanding the coast of Louisiana.

Camp in front of the enemy's lines, below New Orleans, Jan. 10, 1815. My Lord,

It becomes my duty to lay before your Lordship, the proceedings of the force lately employed on the coast of Louisiana, under the command of Maj. Gen. the Hon. Sir E. Pakenham, K. B. and acting concert with Vice-Adm. the Hon. Sir A. Cochrane K. B.

The report which I inclose to Maj. Gen. Keane, will put your Lordship in possession of the occurrence which took place until the arrival of Maj. Gen. the Hon. Sir E. Pakenham, to assume the command; from that period, I send extracts of the journal of Maj. Gen. rest, assistant-quarter-master, up to the time of the joining of the troops (which fell on the 24th O. J. last under my command) which was on the 6th of Jan.

Gibbs and maj. gen. Keane being born off wounded at the same time, with many other commanding officers, and further, the preparations to aid in crossing the ditch not being so forward as they ought to have been, from, perhaps, the men being wounded who were carrying them, caused a wavering in the column, which in such situation became irreparable; and as I advanced with the reserve, at about 250 yards from the line, I had the mortification to observe the whole falling back upon me in the greatest confusion.

In this situation, finding that no impression had been made, and that many men had reached the ditch, they were either drowned or obliged to surrender, and that it was impossible to restore order in the regiments where they were, I placed the reserve in position, until I could obtain such information as to determine me how to act to the best of my judgment, and whether or not I should resume the attack, and if so, I felt it could be done only by the reserve. The confidence I have in the corps composing it, would have encouraged me greatly, though not without loss, which might have made the attempt of serious consequence, as I know it was the opinion of the late distinguished commander of the forces that the carrying of the first line would not be the least arduous service.

Preparations were made on our

bank of the river, and calls upon all the authorities civil and military, to pursue, and to produce immediately, the son of Napoleon Buonaparte, he and his abettors may be dealt with as the law directs.]

The French papers say—The French frigate Le Lys, that sailed from Toulon, has captured three of war and transport vessels, and conveyed Buonaparte and his guard to Frejus.

King Louis, issued a proclamation, dated the 19th of March, saying, that part of the army had betrayed him, but he hoped it would soon acknowledge its errors, and return to its duty. (The King at this time, was quitting his three LATEST.

A letter from Rochelle of the 29th of March, received at Philadelphia, observes, that "We are for a war with England and also all the continent—Buonaparte consolidating his power at Paris, Bourdeaux and Toulouse have declared against him—they are now 5-6th of the nation are for him—Vendee is quits—Massena, at Toulon is in favor of Buonaparte, will preserve the tranquility of Marseilles—vanguard of 20,000 men are marching upon Lise, which place may stand a siege, but the Bourbon family will proceed to England. The communication with Bourdeaux was on the eve of being interrupted. The horizon is—Levies of troops are made—we intend to enter Belgium to fight the English under Wellington—Buonaparte has at his command 150,000 men—all the French are moored in our Road have been sent into our port. It is said British and American war are off our port. We have 44 ships ready; at Toulon 15, some at Rochefort—all the same returned from prison are devoted to Napoleon. Propositions have been made to Germany for the return of Maria Louisa—if Germany remains neutral the rest is not feared, otherwise our condition will be serious."

Supplement to the London Gazette, Tuesday March 7.

Colonial Department, March 9. Downing-st. March 8, 1815.

Despatches of which, the following are copies, have been this day received by Earl Bathurst, one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, from Maj. Gen. Sir John Lambert, K. C. B. commanding the coast of Louisiana.

Camp in front of the enemy's lines, below New Orleans, Jan. 10, 1815. My Lord,

It becomes my duty to lay before your Lordship, the proceedings of the force lately employed on the coast of Louisiana, under the command of Maj. Gen. the Hon. Sir E. Pakenham, K. B. and acting concert with Vice-Adm. the Hon. Sir A. Cochrane K. B.

The report which I inclose to Maj. Gen. Keane, will put your Lordship in possession of the occurrence which took place until the arrival of Maj. Gen. the Hon. Sir E. Pakenham, to assume the command; from that period, I send extracts of the journal of Maj. Gen. rest, assistant-quarter-master, up to the time of the joining of the troops (which fell on the 24th O. J. last under my command) which was on the 6th of Jan.

Gibbs and maj. gen. Keane being born off wounded at the same time, with many other commanding officers, and further, the preparations to aid in crossing the ditch not being so forward as they ought to have been, from, perhaps, the men being wounded who were carrying them, caused a wavering in the column, which in such situation became irreparable; and as I advanced with the reserve, at about 250 yards from the line, I had the mortification to observe the whole falling back upon me in the greatest confusion.

In this situation, finding that no impression had been made, and that many men had reached the ditch, they were either drowned or obliged to surrender, and that it was impossible to restore order in the regiments where they were, I placed the reserve in position, until I could obtain such information as to determine me how to act to the best of my judgment, and whether or not I should resume the attack, and if so, I felt it could be done only by the reserve. The confidence I have in the corps composing it, would have encouraged me greatly, though not without loss, which might have made the attempt of serious consequence, as I know it was the opinion of the late distinguished commander of the forces that the carrying of the first line would not be the least arduous service.

Preparations were made on our

bank of the river, and calls upon all the authorities civil and military, to pursue, and to produce immediately, the son of Napoleon Buonaparte, he and his abettors may be dealt with as the law directs.]

The French papers say—The French frigate Le Lys, that sailed from Toulon, has captured three of war and transport vessels, and conveyed Buonaparte and his guard to Frejus.

King Louis, issued a proclamation, dated the 19th of March, saying, that part of the army had betrayed him, but he hoped it would soon acknowledge its errors, and return to its duty. (The King at this time, was quitting his three LATEST.

A letter from Rochelle of the 29th of March, received at Philadelphia, observes, that "We are for a war with England and also all the continent—Buonaparte consolidating his power at Paris, Bourdeaux and Toulouse have declared against him—they are now 5-6th of the nation are for him—Vendee is quits—Massena, at Toulon is in favor of Buonaparte, will preserve the tranquility of Marseilles—vanguard of 20,000 men are marching upon Lise, which place may stand a siege, but the Bourbon family will proceed to England. The communication with Bourdeaux was on the eve of being interrupted. The horizon is—Levies of troops are made—we intend to enter Belgium to fight the English under Wellington—Buonaparte has at his command 150,000 men—all the French are moored in our Road have been sent into our port. It is said British and American war are off our port. We have 44 ships ready; at Toulon 15, some at Rochefort—all the same returned from prison are devoted to Napoleon. Propositions have been made to Germany for the return of Maria Louisa—if Germany remains neutral the rest is not feared, otherwise our condition will be serious."

Supplement to the London Gazette, Tuesday March 7.

Colonial Department, March 9. Downing-st. March 8, 1815.

Despatches of which, the following are copies, have been this day received by Earl Bathurst, one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, from Maj. Gen. Sir John Lambert, K. C. B. commanding the coast of Louisiana.

Camp in front of the enemy's lines, below New Orleans, Jan. 10, 1815. My Lord,

It becomes my duty to lay before your Lordship, the proceedings of the force lately employed on the coast of Louisiana, under the command of Maj. Gen. the Hon. Sir E. Pakenham, K. B. and acting concert with Vice-Adm. the Hon. Sir A. Cochrane K. B.

The report which I inclose to Maj. Gen. Keane, will put your Lordship in possession of the occurrence which took place until the arrival of Maj. Gen. the Hon. Sir E. Pakenham, to assume the command; from that period, I send extracts of the journal of Maj. Gen. rest, assistant-quarter-master, up to the time of the joining of the troops (which fell on the 24th O. J. last under my command) which was on the 6th of Jan.

Gibbs and maj. gen. Keane being born off wounded at the same time, with many other commanding officers, and further, the preparations to aid in crossing the ditch not being so forward as they ought to have been, from, perhaps, the men being wounded who were carrying them, caused a wavering in the column, which in such situation became irreparable; and as I advanced with the reserve, at about 250 yards from the line, I had the mortification to observe the whole falling back upon me in the greatest confusion.

In this situation, finding that no impression had been made, and that many men had reached the ditch, they were either drowned or obliged to surrender, and that it was impossible to restore order in the regiments where they were, I placed the reserve in position, until I could obtain such information as to determine me how to act to the best of my judgment, and whether or not I should resume the attack, and if so, I felt it could be done only by the reserve. The confidence I have in the corps composing it, would have encouraged me greatly, though not without loss, which might have made the attempt of serious consequence, as I know it was the opinion of the late distinguished commander of the forces that the carrying of the first line would not be the least arduous service.

Preparations were made on our

bank of the river, and calls upon all the authorities civil and military, to pursue, and to produce immediately, the son of Napoleon Buonaparte, he and his abettors may be dealt with as the law directs.]

The French papers say—The French frigate Le Lys, that sailed from Toulon, has captured three of war and transport vessels, and conveyed Buonaparte and his guard to Frejus.

King Louis, issued a proclamation, dated the 19th of March, saying, that part of the army had betrayed him, but he hoped it would soon acknowledge its errors, and return to its duty. (The King at this time, was quitting his three LATEST.

A letter from Rochelle of the 29th of March, received at Philadelphia, observes, that "We are for a war with England and also all the continent—Buonaparte consolidating his power at Paris, Bourdeaux and Toulouse have declared against him—they are now 5-6th of the nation are