LATE FOREIGN NEWS.

New-York, April 21.

Arrived last evening the ship Com-met, Center, in 36 days from Havre de Grace. By this arrival, a file of French papers to the 10th of March, with London dates to the 6th inclusive, are received.

The state of things in England has, it appears, become extremely critical and alarming. The two secret Committees, (appointed by the House of Lords and the House of Commons) have reported the result of their investigation, by which it would seem, that the spirit of disaffection which had agitated the Metropolis, had spread widely over the country, and threatened an immediate and general revolution. In consequence of the facts disclosed in these reports, the suspension of the HABEAS CORPUS, was moved in Parliament, and carried by a majority of 175. Other measures of an energetic character, had also been adopted.

A passenger in the Comet informs us, that when he sailed from Havre, no account had been received of the Prince Regent having signed the Habeas Corpus Bill.

A Paris paper of the 10th March states, on the authority of a London paper of the 5th, which is not received, that the bill for the suspension of the habeas corpus act, did not receive the royal sanction; but Captain Center and his passengers, assert, positively, that it had become a law. It is well known that this extraordinary measure is never resorted to, but on some great occasion, when the government is in danger, and when it is deemed necessary to crush alarming conspiracies, by an arrest of the persons of the leaders, detaining them in close confinement, beyond the power of the magistrate to bail. The motion for suspending the Habeas Corpus Act was made by Lord Castlereagh in the House of Commons, and carried, 273 to 95. The Common Council of London presented a remonstrance against it.

From the London Courier, of Feb.
20.

The Secret Committees.

The two Reports of the Committees of Secrecy have been printed.
The Report of the Commons' Secret Committee was presented to the House of Commons, & delivered out printed this morning. The general features of both Reports are the same; but that of the Commons is more circumstantial. The Lords express their full conviction that designs destructive to the Constitution "have been extended and are still extending widely in many other parts of Great Britain."

The Commons' Committee show in their Report that the disaffected adopted the different forms & symbols of the French revolution, and that the Revolution they meditated was, if possible, more sweeping and immediate in its effects. In France there was some gradation in the attacks upon property. By menace and clamour, men were induced to abandon the salaries of their offices, then their plate, then part of their incomes, & at last were deprived of the rest of their property, and in numerable instances of their lives, upon some charge of being hostile to democracy. If they emigrated their property was seized and sold.
Here the projectors of the revolution meant to begin by depriving every man of his landed and funded property, to declare all the land in common, and to extinguish the funds.
Nor was the religion of the country to be more respected. One of the courses of study by which the Revolutionists prepared themselves for acting their parts on the grand Theatre of Revolution, was to recite profane parodies of the Liturgy, or songs blaspheming the Holy Scriptures. Their revolutionary axe was to cut close and keen enough. Their tree of Liberty was to be planted and moistened with blood enough.
"All constables who touch a man of us to be run through. No RE-GENT—NO CASTLEBAGH—off with their heads—No Placemen, Tithemen, or Inclosures—No Bishops." These are the short but significant expressions of one of their hand-bills.
They had read the annals of the French revolution only to improve upon the practices of the French Demagogues. They find the latter much too slow for them; the route by which they arrived at their goal was too long. The Royal Family were not got rid of for 2 or 3 years after the revolutionary machine had been put in motion. The fees, the dregs of the populace, the Marats and Heberts, and Pere Duchanges of France, did not rise to the top quick enough. They had a certain career to run which did not suit the impatience of the disaffected here.

They wished to set off from the point which their Gallic brethren had reached with difficulty and pain.
The first operation in their revolutionary system was to get rid of Regent, Ministers, Clergy, and all men in office. They marched between treason and blasphemy, and massacre was to be the pioneer of their path.

The symbols of revolution, the tri-coloured flag, the cockade, and the red cap of France were adopted here, as well as the names of the revolutionary Committees; they had their Committee of Public Safety and Conservative Committee. To the soldiers they had, by a second determination, resolved to adopt the means of seduction. But the first plan and impulse was the murder of the soldiers by midnight. The Report to the Commons informs us, that "the design was, by a sudden rising in the dead of the night, to surprise and overpower the soldiers in their different barracks, which were to be set on fire." Heroes of Waterloo! such was the fate resolved upon for you, in the first plan of these regenerators of their country.

Arms were procured; a large quantity of pike heads ordered, and a machine projected for clearing the streets of cavalry. The prisons were to be drained of their inmates; and the murderer, and the felon, & the criminals of all descriptions to be let loose upon the metropolis with arms. These were to be the helpmates and associates of the conspirators—fit engines indeed to carry on the work of treason, massacre and plunder!

The general rising was, as we have already stated, fixed for the 2d of December, and the Commons Committee applying themselves distinctly to this point, gave it as their firm persuasion, that the transactions of that day were deliberately premeditated, and consequently they were "not merely the sudden ebullition of the moment, or the unauthorised attempt of any unconnected individual."

The report of the Committee may be divided into two parts; the first relating to the Metropolis; the second, to the other parts of the country. The picture they draw of the latter is distressing. The system of Clubs has extended itself most widely; and, "in far the greater number of them, and particularly in those which are established in the great manufacturing districts of Lancashire, Leicestershire, Nottinghamshire, and Derbyshire, nothing short of a Revolution is the object expected and avowed." The committee shew the intimate connexion between the Clubs in London and the Clubs in the country, they state that lists of such of the members as are able-bodied are kept, and lists also of proscription and the victims for vengeance. Already do they contemplate the certain success of their design upon the landed property, and assume a corresponding tone and manner as possessors of an equal share of land with every member of the community. Arms are still sought for, and the demand upon gunsmiths for all sorts of fire arms is unparalleled.

Both Reports agree in stating that treasonable designs "still continue to be prosecuted with sanguine hopes of success."

Such is the deliberate statement of the Committee, which they declare "to be a fair and not exaggerated statement."

And now, we suppose, we shall no longer be told that there was and is no plot, and that there was and is no danger. The Commons Committee do not decide what measures are necessary to be adopted, but they conclude by stating, that the dangers which exist are of such a nature, "that the utmost vigilance of the Government under the existing laws, has been found inadequate to prevent them."
