MATRIMONY.

'Is she married?'—'Is he paying attention to any one?'—'When will they be married?' Such are the questions which are invariably heard wherever there is a gathering together of 'grown up children' of the present day. Matrimony, love and courtship form the standing subject of conversation. The very unfrocked urchins catch the cant words of their elders, and talk of 'beaux' and 'wives,' and act over the mimic courtships and marriages. Mothers talk to their daughters of their chances of matrimony; and fathers reckon up in the presence of their children, the amount of bank stock, or the acres of landed property, which are respectively held by the different visitors, neighbours or acquaintances, and having ascertained to a mathematical certainty, the wealthiness of number, invariably recommend him or her as a prize worth seeking after. The first—we had almost said—the only definite idea which a young woman just entering upon her teens can boast of is that she must be married—some time or other—to some body or other—married well if she can—poorly if she must—but at all events, married she must be. The bare idea of an old maid jars upon her sensitive nerves, and acts as a spell to call up associations of disgust and horror. To her the barren and blasted tree—blossomless and leafless rocking to every breeze that sweeps coldly around it, is a symbol of the state of single blessedness. She knows not—dreams not that woman in the exercise of the holy charities and sympathies of her nature, may live on in lonely and unappreciated loneliness, like some beautiful wild flower smiling apart from its clustered sisterhood—

"Fair as a star, when only one
Is shining in the sky."

And, therefore all this talk of matrimony?—why should the young and beautiful so soon learn to fix her thoughts with all-engrossing interest, upon this subject—to speculate and devise plans for what is usually termed marrying well—which being interpreted, signifies marrying a large estate—a handsome house—without much regard to the person or the intellect necessarily appended to these desirable commodities?—And what is marriage after all?—A leap in the dark, and launching out upon an untried ocean. It may, in fact, be happy—heart may unite in the felicity of kindred feeling and sympathy, melting like two clouds of a summer sunset into one another. But this cannot always be. The mysterious cords of human sympathy, are each in a measure, distinct and peculiar—they have no general character—no definite and irreversible affinity.

"Few are the hearts whence one same touch,
Bids the sweet fountains flow."

Marriage too often takes place before the parties have been able fully to understand each other—before the guarded reserve—the dissimulation of courtship have passed away, and given place to the frank impulse of nature and feeling, and disappointment falls keen and heavily upon the votaries of wedlock, when once this irrevocable vow is spoken. In the caustic language of N. de Argens in his 'Philosophy turned Hermit'—A man who would please, carefully conceals his faults, and this is woman's peculiar talent. For six long months two persons study to cheat one another; at least they are joined in wedlock, and their dissimulation proves a mutual punishment during life.

We cannot say with Edward Fitzgerald, that, 'we never saw a bridal but our eyelids have been wet,'—but we have seen some, one at least, when we would have wept, had not the fever of the world long before dried up the fountain of our childhood tears. It was a marriage for money—you might read that in the miserly and decrepit form which drew up its bended proportions before the altar, at the side of a young, beautiful and simple hearted girl. She was pale—and her delicate little hand trembled as it adjusted the folds of her rich garments, and there was a quiver about her fine mouth which told of repressed agony—and, when the ceremony began, she turned one hasty glance upon her ill-suited bridegroom, and I could see her shrink from him, with a slight but evident feeling of disgust and abhorrence. I looked upon the bridegroom—he was regarding her with as much fondness as his cold and selfish heart was capable of—a miserly chuckle, as if he had just counted over his gold—the smile of an orang outang. And was this the man to whom that beautiful creature was to be bound—a living and lovely being upon a lifeless corpse—beauty and greenness upon barrenness and decay?—And her friends and her relatives—they stood clustering around her with their eyes fixed, not upon the agonized countenance of their victim, but upon the jewelry and gauds which adorned her. Fools—fools—know they not the victim of a Pagan immolation is as gaudily decked when she is placed upon her pile of consuming, and that her sacrifice is far less terrible than that of a young and lovely creature, made in the perfect similitude of angels, and glowing with rich and ardent affections, upon the polluted shrine of Mammon! Alas! what could ever atone for this chaining of the human affections—this binding of loveliness and innocence to age, disease and avarice! Sick at heart we turned away from the melancholy spectacle, whilst these words of the immortal William Penn, rushed strongly upon our memory. "Oh—how sordid has man grown! man the noblest creature of the universe, as a God upon earth and the image of Him who made it, thus to make earth for heaven, and worship gold for God."

DIGGING OUT A HOLE.
"An' so ye're digging out the hole there Pat, at ye?" said one Irishman to another engaged in making a hole to insert a post. "No, it's not the hole that I am after digging out—for I am digging the dirt out and leaving the hole here!"

SCENES IN LONDON.
MISTRESS HOPE.—On Saturday the Lord Mayor, upon going into the Justice Room, was handed the following epistle:—
"To the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor of London, &c."

"My Lord,—While demoralizing themes are lited on the giddy pinnacle of fortune, while even the excess of depravation can find an asylum—shall the zealous adherent of pure morality and mental improvement, driven on the verge of the tomb by his ardent for British ascendancy, and by sickness, be denied pity? Oh, my Lord, I can give to you unequivocal proofs of my sincerity. It is not possible but the civil Magistrate of the metropolis of the world will, even in equity, but particularly of his generous feelings, either grant a pass to bring me to Beltest, or yield a snail or two and a pair of shoes to lead me on my sorrowful path, so far as the dry ground terminates. I am friendless, penniless, strengthless, and homeless, though influenced by my own glowing zeal and the enthusiasm of my heart to believe that I should find every Briton breathe these general and generous feelings which should ever distinguish the sons of fair Britannia. Will your Lordship condescend to hear a few words of an experimental conversation with me? I wait your Lordship's command in the ante-chamber."

The Lord Mayor having desired that the writer of the letter should make his appearance, a man about 35 years of age, every article of whose dress was in a most poetical condition, entered from the paupers' room, to which his warm imagination had applied the more graceful epithet.

Pray (said the Lord Mayor) how does it happen that such a master of language as you are in such a woful plight?

Applicant—This is, my Lord, an ordination of Providence. I have tried my hand at all concerns, and done nothing. Providence must have had some motive for producing me, but it is the most hidden and mysterious motive in existence. (Laughter.)

The Lord Mayor—What business have you been engaged in?

Applicant—Teaching the young idea how to shoot in Ireland—(Laughter)—but it was hungry work; I worked all day, and had no substantial food to support me; for though I used to cut the meat for the boys, I was obliged to shave it for myself. (Lord Mayor laughs.)

The mistress had a sharp eye and hated waste; and she knew to the weight of a grain what quantity I sent down to keep life moving in me. (Laughter.)

The Lord Mayor—They act more liberally in England.

Applicant—That, my Lord, was the identical circumstance that made me direct my steps here. "Go," says every one, "to the Mansion-house, and see what a difference there is." (Great laughter.)

The Lord Mayor—You mistake me, my friend. I mean the keepers of schools. You will have a better chance of good treatment here in your profession.

Applicant—I hope so, my Lord. But I was assured that the schoolmaster was abroad everywhere in England; and, by the virtue of my oath, I have scarcely seen a man since I landed on your shores that ever yet appeared to have met him. (Laughter.) Where's the use in instructing the obstinate and the brutal? I sent a play, a tragedy, to Drury Lane Theatre, and they promised to bring it out before the public, but it was obliged to yield its place to the dragons, tigers, and pole-cats, although there was not a line in it that was not the height of morality and virtue. (Laughter.)

A gentleman, who was present, said that he believed the tragedy would have been brought out, were it not for the engagement of Monsieur Martin and his domestics.

Applicant—They wanted me to introduce the natives of the woods and wilds, and desolate places, but I told them I did not understand the language, and so they employed one of the link-boys, and they allow him the privilege of driving the two trades—incendiary and dramatist. (Laughter.)

The Lord Mayor—Well, I regret to see you in such a condition. Your habits, I am afraid, must be rather uneconomical, or you would not be so ragged. However, you shall have a few shillings and something to cover you, and I will send you home.

Applicant—Most respectfully I thank you, my Lord Mayor, and if ever you come to Ireland, and happen to be in the same condition that I am in, you shall command my services.
