LONDON, May 30. The general anxiety to hear the result of the new Ministerial arrangements collected a number of eager inquirers on the Exchange during the whole of the morning. When known it appeared to give general satisfaction as to the main point—that of securing sufficient union among members of the Adminis-tration to allow the public business of the country to proceed with due order and regularity; but an expectation certainly existed that some men of rather more decided influence and character would be brought into office on this occasion.
