POETRY.

BY MES SIGOURNEY. Morn on herrow couch awoke.
Enchantment led the hour,
And Mirth and Music drank the dews
That freshened Beauty's flower—
Then from her bower of deep delight
I heard a young girl sing,
'Oh! speak no ill of Poetry,
For 'tis a holy thing."

For 'tis a holy thing."
The sun in noen-day heat rose high,
And on with heaving breast
I saw a weary pilgrim toil,
Unpitited and unblest—
Yet still in trembling measure flow'd
Forth from a broken string,
"(th, speak no ill of Poetry,"
For 'tis a holy thing."

Twas night, and Death the curtains drew,

Twas night, and Death the curtains drew 'Mid agony severe, While there a willing spirit went, Home to a glorious sphere—
Yet still it sighed; even when was spread The waiting Angel's wing, with, speak no ill of Poetry,
For its a holy thing?
