unlawfully detained, and several thousand of our citizens in the worst species of human bondage.

Towards Spain we feel only the sentiment that we feel towards all nations, "in war enemies, in peace friends." If after so many years of misunderstanding, Spain is at length willing to renew her old friendship for the U. States, the disposition always prevails in the U. States, to forget the past, in the manifestation of friendly disposition in future.—We have reason to think that such dispositions prevail in Spain, and that the issue will be acceptable to both nations. Aurora.

Later still from Europe.

"New-York, July 27.

"This morning arrived the ship Sefin, Howard, 40 days from Bordeaux. The ships Erin, Stevenson, and Ranger, Sherbourn, of Baltimore, were there; the latter to sail 25th June for Tonningen. Enclosed you have the latest papers.

"Also arrived, ship Jane, Bragdon, 45 days from Cadiz. No news by her.

The editor of the Federal Gazette has received (via N. York) Bordeaux papers to the 12th June inclusive, containing Paris dates of the sixth, and intelligence from the armies down to the 30th May.

We hasten to translate the 77th bulletin, which presents the official account of the fall of Dantzic. No general battle had taken place; nor do these papers contain intelligence of any other important movements.

The Ann and Elizabeth, of Norfolk, was at Bordeaux, to sail for Baltimore 25th June.

BORDEAUX, May 12.

POSTSCRIPT

(Courier of this morning.)

SEVENTY-SEVENTH BULLETIN OF THE GRAND ARMY

Finkenstein, 27th May, 1807.

Dantzic has capitulated. That fine place is in our power. Eight hundred pieces of artillery, magazines of all kinds, more than 500,000 quintals of grain, cloth, groceries, &c.; all kinds of provisions for the army, and in fine, a place of the first strength to support our left, as Thorn supports our centre and Prag our right—those are the advantages obtained during the winter, and which have signalised the leisure hours of the grand army—these are the first and finest fruits of the victory of Eylau.

The rigor of the season, the snow which has often covered our trenches, and the frost which has added new difficulties, have been no obstacles to our labors. Marshal Lefevre has surmounted every thing: He has animated with the same spirit Saxons, Poles and Badens. The difficulties which the artillery had to encounter were considerable. One hundred mouths of fire, from five to six hundred thousand pounds of powder, & an immense quantity of balls, have been shot from Stettin and different parts of Silesia.

We would also have had to overcome difficulties of transport, but the Vistula offered a prompt and easy conveyance. The seamen of the guard carried the boats under the fort of Graudentz with their usual skill and bravery.

Gen. Chasseloup, gen. Kirgener, col. Lecoste, and indeed all the officers, have behaved in the most distinguished manner. The miners have displayed a surprising intrepidity. The corps of artillery, commanded by gen. Lariboissiere has maintained its reputation. The second regiment of light infantry, the 12th and the Parisian troops have also distinguished themselves.

A detailed account of this siege will be carefully given. It will record a great number of feats of bravery, worthy of being held up as examples to excite enthusiasm and admiration.

On the 19th the descent and the passage of the Moat were executed, at 7 o'clock in the evening. On the 21st general Lefevre had prepared every thing for the assault, when col. Lecoste, who had been sent into the place in the morning, made known, that general Kalkreuth offered to capitulate on the same conditions which had been formerly granted to the garrison of Mayence, which was agreed to.

Hakelsberg could have been carried by assault without much loss; but as the corps of the place were still complete, and a large ditch filled with water would have enabled the besieged to hold out for fifteen days, it was thought best to grant them an honorable capitulation.

On the 27th, the garrison marched out, with general Kalkreuth at his head. This strong garrison, which at first consisted of 16,000 men, is reduced to 9000, and of this number 4000 have deserted: there are even officers among the deserters. "We do not wish," say they, "to go to Siberia." We have obtained many thousand artillery horses, but they are in very bad order. General Rapp has been appointed governor of Dantzic.

The Russian lieutenant general, Kamenski, after having been beaten on the 15th, retired behind the fortifications of Weischelmunde. He remained there, without daring to undertake any thing, and beheld the reduction of the place. When he saw that they were preparing red hot balls to destroy his vessels, he embarked, and withdrew—He has returned to Pillau.

The fort of Weischelmunde still held out: Marshal Lefevre summoned it on the 26th, & while they were adjusting the articles of capitulation, the garrison sallied out and surrendered. The commandant thus abandoned, saved himself by water. We are now therefore masters of the city and port of Dantzic. These events forebode a happy omen for the campaign. The emperor of Russia and the king of Prussia were at Heligenbeel: they must have known the reduction of Dantzic by the cessation of the fire, which can be heard at the former place.

The emperor (Napoleon) to testify his satisfaction at the conduct of the besiegers, has granted a compensation to each soldier.

The siege of Graudentz commences under the command of Gen. Victor. Gen. Lazowski commands the infantry, and General Dantheuard the artillery. Graudentz is strong on account of its great quantity of mines.

The cavalry of the army is beautiful; the divisions of light cavalry, two divisions of cuirassieurs and one of dragoons, were reviewed at Elbing, on the 26th, by the grand duke of Berg.

On the same day, his majesty went to Bishoffverder and Stralsburg, and reviewed the division of cuirassieurs, commanded by Hautpoult, and the division of dragoons, commanded by Gen. Grouchy. His majesty was well pleased with their conduct, and the good state of their horses.

The ambassador of the Porte, Seid Mohammed Emen Vahid, was on the 28th, at 2 o'clock P. M. introduced by M. the prince of Beneventto, to the Emperor, to whom he presented his credentials: He remained an hour in his majesty's cabinet; he lodges in the Castle, and occupies the apartments of the grand duke of Berg, now absent at the review.

We are assured that the emperor said to the ambassador, that he and the Sultan Selim, would henceforward be as inseparable as the right hand and the left.

The news of the success of Ismael and Wallachia has just been received: the Russians have been forced to raise the siege of Ismael, and to evacuate Wallachia.

Capitulation of Dantzic.

After a long resistance, 51 days with open trenches, imperious circumstances rendered it necessary to capitulate for the surrender of Dantzic to the troops of his majesty the emperor of the French, king of Italy, & those of his allies, it has been agreed upon between his excellency M. the general of cavalry, count de Kalkreuth, knight of the order of L'Aigle Noir and of the order of St. Andrew, and M. the general of division, Drouet, commander of the legion of honor & grand cross of the royal order of Bavaria, chief of the etat-major-general of the 10th corps of the grand army, invested with full powers from his excellency M. the marshal of the empire, Lefebvre, commander in chief of the said corps, as follows:

Art. 1. The garrison shall march out on the 27th instant, at 9 o'clock in the morning, with their arms and baggage, colors flying, drums beating, match lighted, two pieces of artillery & their waggons drawn by six horses each.

2. The remainder of the artillery horses shall be surrendered to the French.

3. The arms of all sorts, except those belonging to the officers and soldiers shall be given up to officers of the artillery to be appointed for the purpose.

4. The garrison shall be conducted to the advanced posts of the army of his majesty the king of Prussia, at Pillau, passing by Nearing.

5. The garrison engages not to serve against the French army nor its allies, for 1 year, reckoning from the date of the present capitulation. M. the general count De Kalkreuth, his highness the prince De Scherbatovy, and the officers engage, upon their word of honor, to observe and cause to be observed the present article.

6. On the 26th, at noon, Hakelsberg, the gates of Oliva, Jacob and Neugarten shall be given up to the troops of his majesty the emperor of the French, king of Italy, and those of his allies.

7. The officers, non commissioned officers and soldiers, at present prisoners of war to Dantzic, whether belonging to the troops of his majesty the emperor or those of his allies, shall be exchanged.

8. To prevent all confusion, the troops of his majesty the emperor and those of his allies, shall not enter Dantzic until after the departure of the Prussians to Pillau.—There shall, nevertheless, be a guard fixed at the different gates.

9. As the means of transportation are insufficient to carry off all the baggage, a boat shall be granted to the garrison, which shall go direct to Pillau. The embarkation shall be made under the superintendance of a French officer.

10. Officers shall be appointed on both sides to give up and receive articles belonging to the two armies, including charts, plans, &c.

11. The magazines, waggons, and whatever belongs to the king, shall be given up to the French, and a commissary shall be appointed to deliver them to the person who may be authorized by his excellency M. the marshal Lefebvre to receive them.

12. The Prussian officers who were prisoners on parole, and who had returned to their families in Dantzic before the siege of the place, may remain there to wait the orders of their general, the prince of Neufchatel, major general; but, to enjoy this advantage, they shall produce a certificate from M. the governor, declaring that they have not assisted in the defence of the place.

13. The wives of all the officers and others, shall be at liberty to leave the town, and shall be furnished with a passport for that purpose.

14. The wounded and sick shall remain under the care of his excellency marshal Lefebvre: officers and surgeons shall be left, as well to take good care of them as to preserve good order and supply their wants. As soon as they recover, they shall be sent to the advanced posts of the Prussian army, and enjoy all the advantages of this capitulation.

15. An exact list of the officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers, according to their respective regiments shall be given to his excellency marshal Lefebvre. A strict control shall be kept over the soldiers who may remain in the hospital.

16. His excellency marshal Lefebvre assures the inhabitants of Dantzic, that he will use every exertion to have their persons and property respected, and that the utmost order shall be maintained by the garrison.

17. In order to guarantee the observance of this capitulation, a superior officer shall be sent to the respective head quarters. His excellency the governor has appointed M. the major Lestocq; and his excellency marshal Lefebvre has appointed the adjutant commandant Guichard.

18. The present capitulation shall go in force, if, by the 26th instant, at noon, the garrison shall not have received any succors. And it is understood, that, in the intermediate time, the garrison of Dantzic cannot make any attack upon the besiegers, supposing that the latter should fight outside.

Done at Dantzic, the 10th May, 1807.

The ship Arthur, has arrived at Salem from Canton. Left it the 26th March. Letters by her have been received at Philadelphia, stating that the difference between the Chinese & British had not been accommodated—that the Vice-Roy adhered to his demand of reparation, to which the English commandant, would not accede—that the chief of the British factory had determined to send the ships to England with that part of their cargoes, which was then on board, and which was not more than would ballast them—that the business in American & country ships went on as usual—and that the Americans were considered in the most favorable light by the Chinese.

NOTICE.

A true statement of a piece of dealings that happened between William Walker, sail-maker, and Adam & John M'Leane.

Ha! Ha! Have we found Saul among the Prophets. Candid Billy, we are sorry your trumpeter is dead and that you have to sound your own praise. We saw a piece in the American of the 25th instant—we thought it had been penned by a madman, before we saw your signature at bottom: But, as it is composed of lies and contradictions, it cannot be made intelligible. However, the next piece you write, make less mistakes; for you know a liar ought to have a good memory. Now, to facts. You called about the middle of August 1806, and agreed with me, John M'Leane, for to do the iron work of a new schooner for you. The work commenced on the 19th of August, and you engaged to pay me cash on condition you sold the vessel before she sailed, or in 90 days at all events. I informed my father that I had engaged to do the iron work of the schooner for William Walker; he told me I had done wrong; I asked him why; he told me that he had ever heard he was bad pay, and that he would not pay without being compelled by law. I informed him that you were in a good way, and expected that you would pay according to contract; he seemed satisfied, and said I should go on with the work. The schooner made two trips, and I asked him repeatedly for the money; he always put me off with false stories; we wrote him a few lines, which were the cause of his calling and offered his note at sixty days, which we accepted of; we found that we were mistaken in the man. The schooner arrived about three weeks before the note became due; we put the note in the bank for collection; at past two o'clock, on the last day of grace, William Walker came to my father, and asked him if he would take up the note; he said he could not collect but forty-one dollars, it being Friday; he promised to pay him on Wednesday or Thursday the next week, and he refused to take up the note. As I never knew him to speak a word of truth, I could not confide in what he said. Like all the rest of his lies, he says in his dirty lying epistle, that he offered me sixty-five dollars. Shame on you, lying Billy: You said you offered me every assurance that you would pay me the balance in three days. What assurance had you to offer me, but your polluted word, which never was found true yet by us? As to the epithets mentioned in your lying epistle they will verberate on your own lying head. You say we want to hurt your character. No, Billy, you have not left that in our power; for your dirty, low-lived way of dealing has ruined your character, as we believe you are better known than trusted. Again you say we try to injure your character; but we say unto you, that passing and repassing between our shops, we hear one say Billy owes him money these three years, another says he owes him money these five years.—Candid, these periods are long before you and us had dealings; so blame us not for hurting your good name. You brag much of your long residence in Baltimore, but you do not think of the grand affront you have given to those respectable citizens, whom you want to countenance in one of the most ridiculous packs of foolish lies that ever was seen on paper. A few words more, candid Billy:—"Woe unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness and his chambers by wrong, that useth his neighbor's service without wages, and giveth him not for his work." For likeness let us turn over to Cain who murdered his good brother Abel, and see him fleeing from the presence of God, as he thought to escape with downcast eyes and a fallen countenance. O! ye citizens, look at anti-candid Billy Walker, and see the true marks of Cain in his countenance. Pray, insulted citizens, look at Billy, and ask him if he has paid for the iron work of a schooner which he has sold, and see if he does not look first to the right and then to the left—at last his countenance falls, like Cain, and never can look a man in the face.
