The clerk of the senate delivers the supplement to an act, entitled, An act to establish a bank, and to incorporate the subscribers thereto, and the following message:

BY THE SENATE, NOVEMBER 28, 1800.

GENTLEMEN,

WE return you the bill, entitled, A supplement to an act, entitled, An act to establish a bank, and incorporate the subscribers thereto, with the expectation that on reconsideration you will pass it. We originated it upon the information that great inconvenience is felt from the rotation of directors established by the twelfth section in the act of incorporation. Persons, after having gained experience, and conducted themselves with propriety, in the direction, have been dismissed, merely in compliance with that section. The selection of proper characters for directors of the three banks in the city of Baltimore, even in its most flourishing condition, occasioned no small embarrassment, which has been greatly increased by the number of late failures. If the bill should meet your approbation, the directors will be still subject to the control of the stockholders, who may displace at such annual election those directors whose conduct or circumstances might induce a majority of the stockholders to think a change expedient, and conducive to the welfare of the institution.

By order,

W. S. GREEN, clk.

Which was read.

The house resumed the further consideration of the order of the day respecting sundry applicants for acts of insolvency, and the memorial of the merchants of Baltimore, counter to their applications, and the following question was propounded to the house, viz.

RESOLVED, That it is the opinion of the house, that the power of the state governments to pass insolvent laws is not taken away or limited to persons actually in confinement, by the operation of the constitution of the United States.

Which was read the first and second time, and the question put, That the house assent thereto? The yeas and nays being required, appeared as follow:
