His BUPPERT, the finest in the city, is stocked with the BEST OF WINES, LIQUORS AND CIGARS about 1000 prices. The abrupt bank is an old coral reef, which has risen far above the water-level, like a huge natural fort. Inside is a plateau sheltered from storms, and favored with a deep rich soil.
Sir William says the natives gave him a most pleasant reception. He found it very difficult to travel through some villages on account of the yams, cocoanuts, mats, and other articles that were laid down before him for his acceptance. There are no intertribal hostilities, and it is not possible for the natives of other islands to oppress the people.
The Yellowstone Park.
The largest park in the world is the Yellowstone, whose area is equal to that of a good-sized State. It is owned by the nation, and contains enough natural wonders to satisfy the most exacting traveler. Not only are the mountains as fine as the Alps, but there are geysers and hot springs without number, brilliantly colored cliffs, and rivers and canyons so deep that only the steepest canyons descend into them, and besides these big wonders there are howlers of granite and gems by the bushel. The annual report of the superintendent also shows that the park is a good deal of a menagerie. He estimates that there are now in the park 25,000 elk, 400 buffalo, 500 antelope, and large numbers of moose, deer, beavers, bears, and other game. Nobody is permitted to shoot any animals in the Yellowstone Park, but the law is sometimes disregarded, and Superintendent Anderson, who is a captain of the United States army, recommends that poachers be severely dealt with. The buffalo in this reservation are almost the only specimens that are left from the great herds that used to sweep like flocks over the plains of the West. Twenty thousand were not so enormous a herd as to seem remarkable to the hunters, but the market for the hides and the slaughter of the buffalo throughout the West. Were it not for the Yellowstone National Park, there is good reason to believe that in a few years there would not be a single specimen of the American buffalo living. As it is, they are far greater curiosities in the United States than the giraffe, at once the strangest and the most delicate of all the animals sought for menageries.
Italians in America.
The Italians are the latest European people to come to the United States in large numbers. During the first years of the republic not many foreigners were added to the population of descendants of the early Dutch, English, and French settlers. Finally the Irish began to come, then the Germans, then the Scandinavians, and now the Italians are flocking here in larger numbers than the people of any other nation. At first they were regarded with suspicion, and in most cases they came only for the purpose of making money, and returning with it to their families and families in Italy. But as larger numbers came, more and more Italians found their way into the United States, until there are now in New York City alone nearly one hundred thousand, most of them being thrifty and hard-working residents. Of course those who are here wish to have their friends come here to live also; and just as whole Irish families have been invited to find homes and prosperity in America through the savings of one servant-girl, so the Italians put aside a large share of their earnings either to help to support their old parents or to bring their brothers and sisters in Italy or to bring members of their family to the United States. An Italian banker in New York recently estimated that at least $200,000 is sent in Italy every year by the Italians in the United States.

A Duel Between Giraffes.
In South Africa, where giraffes are common, they roamed the afternoon through in Central Park, New York. It threatens its way easily among the crush of equipages on the East Drive, turning, winding in and out, and checking or increasing speed as readily as any of the vehicles drawn by horses. It moves noiselessly and without smoke, gliding along without any locomotive-like clankings or puffings. It resembles an ordinary mail phaeton, the propelling machinery being in the box under and back of the seat. The seat will carry two passengers. The wheels have solid rubber tires, the leather top, lights and other appointments resembling an ordinary carriage. The motor wagon is of a type said to be popular in Germany, where, it is claimed, 300 have been made. The ordinary speed is at the rate of a mile in 2.40.
A Horseless Phaeton.
Recently a mysterious, self-propelling car, has, as we have seen, been making its way through the Central Park, New York. It threatens its way easily among the crush of equipages on the East Drive, turning, winding in and out, and checking or increasing speed as readily as any of the vehicles drawn by horses. It moves noiselessly and without smoke, gliding along without any locomotive-like clankings or puffings. It resembles an ordinary mail phaeton, the propelling machinery being in the box under and back of the seat. The seat will carry two passengers. The wheels have solid rubber tires, the leather top, lights and other appointments resembling an ordinary carriage. Dwellers in a Natural Fort.
The island of Kitsu, which lies off the northeast coast of New Guinea, has long been supposed to be uninhabited. From the sea no signs of human life are visible, as a short distance back from the beach a bank rises abruptly to a height of 300 to 400 feet. Sir William McGregor, the Governor of British New Guinea, says that the island, which has an area of five square miles, supports about 1000 persons. The abrupt bank is an old coral reef, which has risen far above the water-level, like a huge natural fort. Inside is a plateau sheltered from storms, and favored with a deep rich soil.
Sir William says the natives gave him a most pleasant reception. He found it very difficult to travel through some villages on account of the yams, cocoanuts, mats, and other articles that were laid down before him for his acceptance. There are no intertribal hostilities, and it is not possible for the natives of other islands to oppress the people.
Living over a Volcano.
China is populated so thickly that hundreds of thousands of people live all the year round in house-boats. Japan is not so over-crowded as China, but it is populated so thickly that about twenty thousand persons live in the crater of Aso San, a volcano about thirty miles distant from the city of Kumamoto. "Think," says a writer in the Chicago "Times," of walking the miles among fertile farms and prosperous villages peering into school-house windows and sacred shrines, all within the shell of an old-time crater, whose walls rise 800 feet all about you. It gives one a queer feeling. Hot springs abound everywhere. In one place I saw the brick-red hot water utilized to turn a rice mill. The hot water is nearly half a mile in diameter, and a steady column of roaring steam pours out of it. The last serious eruption was in 1884, when immense quantities of black ashes and hot water ejected and carried by the wind as far as Kumamoto, where for three days it was so dark that artificial light had to be used.
A Sad Awakening.
In one of Theodore Hook's stories the bride groom, departing with his bride for their honeymoon, is disturbed by a continual tapping on the floor of the post chaise. It begins to bother him exceedingly. "What that tapping is that noise!" at last he mutters. "It is nothing, darling," answers the bride sweetly. "It is only my wooden leg." Only that, and nothing more. She had got accustomed to it from long use, but the for nation put him out exceedingly and caused a coolness which was permanent.
Granite is the bed rock of the world, being the lowest on earth's crust.

Your Blood?
I had a malignant breaking out on my leg below the knee, and was cured sound and well with two and a half bottles of the S.S.S. Other blood medicines had failed to do me any good. WILL C. BEATY, Yorkville, S. C.
I was troubled from childhood with an aggravated case of Tetter, and three bottles of S.S.S. cured me permanently. JAMES MANN, Manville, I. T.
