TALK OF THE TOUT.
PECULIAR EXPRESSIONS USED ON THE RACE TRACKS.
While mystifying to the Uninitiated, They Are Easily Understood When Once Explained—Some of the Phrases Are Very "Cute"—Mostly of English Origin.
Race track phrases are intricate to the uninitiated as a Fiji Islander's love song are fast creeping into all walks of life, and the slang which makes up the vocabulary of the turfman is liable to be heard in the social small talk of the day, in the right business house and frequently in the club. Where some of the terms originated is a mystery, but the genuine "tout" speaks nothing else, and his jargon is at once interesting and novel. Nearly all of the expressions, like the "touts" have probably come from the English courses, and the English race going people are more familiar with the words of the stable boy or lower class than the American patrons of this sport of the Kings.
The "touts" are divided into two classes, the choice ones to the trotters, and the mixture at the tracks where the long tailed light harness performers win stakes and purse is a combination of later years.
The modern "tout," this genius believes one who almost sleeps on tracks and imparts his early morning information to you when half of the winnings of your bet are promised him, can spin it off by the yard, and some of his expressions are indeed unique.
"There she goes in pieces," he will exclaim as the filly he has picked to win suddenly wags and begins to fall to the rear. He may say something about her "shutting up like a jackknife" as she drops into the rack, which means that she has fallen out of the procession. Should she go out of her proper course in running, he will inform you that she has "bolted," and he will call her a "hare" if she happens to swerve against another horse, impeding his progress. If she should have been called for some reason he had not learned, he may call her a "dead end," meaning that she was not intended to win, but if he applies the word "duddy" to her that means she couldn't beat anything.
On the turf the term "deadbeat" has two meanings. It is sometimes applied to a horse completely exhausted and is always applied to any man who fails to pay his debts. In the latter sense the term is no different from any other place.
"Why he'll head from end to end" would signify that the animal in question will be in front of the others from the start to the finish. Should another horse come up suddenly and dispute every inch of the way, the discomfited horse is said to "challenge" the other, and when he arrives alongside of him and there is no difference between their noses from the stand the two are racing "head and head." It might seem to be a breach of etiquette to hear a man say that some old horse is the "swelliest maiden" on the track. This would indicate that the horse is the best one that has never won a race.
Should a track follower tell you that he saw a certain horse out of a "bump in the morning," he didn't "negotiate" well, he is intending to convey the information that in the morning exercise the horse would not jump or run well.
The betting terms on the track are quite mysterious and some of the expressions for amounts of money are on a par with the "sper," "lenny," "mash" and other common terms among the light fingered gentry. "I run a pony into a century" then drops the man whole thing, trying to run it into a monkey. The pony is $25, the century $100 and the monkey $500. Should he have won the last bet, and the book-maker, taking time by the forelock and his cashbox by the handle, disappointed without paying off, the discomfited gentleman would have carried the name "welder" around with him the rest of his life. The words "cinch," "moral," "lead pipe" and a few others not unlike them are used to indicate that a horse cannot lose and that families can be satisfied that he should fall down.
To win "hands down" is to reach the wire first without effort or "in a bloody canter" as a track follower might observe in his philosophical way. And when they say a bookmaker "has a man who has his finger in your judgment—"rounding" up his book they mean he is trying to get money on some horse which have not been heavily betted, so that no matter who wins his percentage is there just the same.
"Crack" means a horse which is catching the leaders very rapidly and "coming again" means one that has done this, then fallen back and suddenly gaining courage and speed makes another dash for the front. Should he jump up to the front legs of one in the lead he will be said to have "cut him down," and should horse or jockey fall just as they are in sight of the money somebody will probably say, "He came down a cropper."
The vocabulary of the follower of the track is quite extensive and very catching, for the pleasant little dimers that the drolly or handie has been decided are likely to have lots of such expressions mixed in the idle prattle while the vicinals are being discussed.—Exchange.

Court life in Stockholm is reduced to the simplest proportions. Each of the young princes is devoted to some special study, and both the king and queen have always striven to be their children's chief friends and confidants.
