"THE TIMES" Circulates in 1,500 Hom.s.
Everybody reads it! The Neighbor
As a rural advertising medium it is unequaled.

NO PRIVATES!
The "general" tells with swelling pride, How the fires of battle gleamed—
Of the slaughter of men "on the other side."
As the shell and shrapnel rained, How "we" charged the foe like the mighty wave
Of a wild and stormy sea,
But in the rush of the true and brave, The private—where was he?
The "colonel" boasts how his horse fell On Georgia's blood stained hills:
How he stomped the ground with that battle bell, Avenging his country's ill;
How the ghastly heaps of the gallant slain Bestrewn the slippery ground, But we study the tragic tale in vain,
There were no privates round.
Oh, the "major's" sword, it was red with gore!
And great was the fear alarm,
As they charged and halted and fled before The swing of his mighty arm.
But freedom lurked in her quietude As she awaited the hosts of sin—
And the lonely pensioner still forgets That the privates were not in.
How brave they flew, at their country's call,
To the outpost far in front "Generals," "colonels" and "majors" all To stand the brunt of the foe's attack, And the "captains" stand, ten thousand strong,
To tell how the thing was done—But where was the "private" in that throng?
Alas, there was not one!
—Cleveland Plain Dealer.
BROKE UP THE PRAYER MEETING.
Disconcerting Effect on Chaplain Jones of a Forsaking Captain's Find.
The propensity of the American soldier for fun cannot be subdued by dangerous suffering. In fact, I have known him crack jokes in comfort with the crackling files of the enemy when death might be momentarily expected. And, strange as it may seem, the boys took special delight in tormenting the chaplain. Of what the hundreds of thousands of men who served in the war, I doubt if there was one who at any time permitted himself to acquire a full and true conception of what the chaplain was for. It was a close thing at Chattanooga in the winter of 1863-64.
The meals were scant and far between, yet, moving out on the line that "man's existence is God's opportunity," Chaplain Jones (at least so I shall call him) held regular Sunday services in our camp, and a large crowd was always present that seven up and poker may become tiresome. In the midst of our starving and of Chaplain Jones' revival Captain Sam Smith took a foraging party across Waldron's ridge and scoured hill and valley for anything edible from an ear of corn to a subtle skirt. It chanced that this party returned to camp just as one of Brother Jones' revival meetings was in full blast—that is, Jones was in full blast for the revival. He had a loud voice, and one of his great traits harked at an unappreciative audience struck like a load of cannon hitting a barn. Just as Captain Smith and party were passing the door Chaplain Jones chanced to hawl out:
"Behold, now, the captain of our salvation."
Smith stuck his head into the door and bellowed:
"You're d—d right, chaplain. I've got pork and potatoes enough to set every man in the crowd to slitting!"
"Captain Smith," said the chaplain sternly, "I am shocked that you should disturb the house of prayer!"
"Disturb the devil! I can put more religion into the boys with one ham of this razorback steak than you can howl into them in the next 10 months!" There was a rush and a roar, and 15 minutes later Chaplain Jones was solemnly roasting a razorback steak before the fire and singing a psalm to the "captain of his salvation."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.
Overhead Dogs.
So long as our dogs were employed in the habit of two organized regiments of men the tendency of the association with the superior being was in a high measure educative. They were constantly submited to a more or less critical, but always effective, selection which tended ever to develop a higher grade of intelligence. With the advance in the organization of society the dog is ever losing something of his utility, even in the way of sport. He is fast becoming a mere idle favorite, prized for unimportant peculiarities of form. The effort in the main is not now to make creatures which can help in the important moments of man, but to breed for show alone, demanding no more intelligence than is necessary to make the creature a well behaved member of a household. The result is the institution of a wonderful variety in the size, shape and special peculiarities of different breeds, with what appears to men concomitant loss in their intelligence. It appears to me, in a word, that our pet breed of this noble animal, where he is bred for ornament, is in effect degrading.

Athletes and Consumption.
"There is very great danger of an athlete dying of lung trouble if he ever ceases to sport," said Professor A. C. Matthews.
"In athletic exercises large lungs are required, and they become inflated beyond their natural size. If the athlete ceases his practice and does anything approaching a sedentary life, the lungs, falling largely into disuse, easily decay, and the result is quick consumption. It is frequently the case that young men in college who are athletic leaders after graduation go into stores, offices or counting rooms and in a few years die of consumption.
Every one is surprised, and it is said:
"Such a strong, healthy man when he left college! Who would have thought he would die with consumption? Must have been hereditary." As a matter of fact, he brought it upon himself, by failing to keep up the practices that expanded his lungs." —Cincinnati Enquirer.
As to Swearing.
Wife—You say a man does not swear at random, but harmoniously to the subject he is sworn to. Now, how would he swear if he came home hungry to dinner and there was no dinner in sight?
"Huh—My love, you have that last sentence out of plumb. You shouldn't say "how would he swear," but how he would swear, if he came home hungry to dinner and there wasn't any dinner." —Detroit Free Press.
Paper was first made from cotton rags
