

be also out-lawed; that as all nations were forbidden to enter French ports; that he would forbid all nations to enter English ports, that the British should have no trade with the continent but by express permission; and he declared that this should be a fundamental law of the empire whilst Britain persisted in her maritime tyranny. In whatever way, therefore, these events may be misrepresented, it is not the less the fact that the objects of the continental system were the same as the armed neutrality of 1780, and that the principles uniformly avowed by France are precisely the same as those which the American congress of 1776 solemnly declared should forever be maintained.

Britain imagined that with the command of the ocean, she could reduce France; she flattered herself that a loss of colonial produce and an interruption of intercourse with the western world, would compel France to ask such a peace as that of 1763, and to agree to it upon British terms; and that this policy would at least enrich the British merchant. The ministers of England acted like school boys, upon expedients, and expedients are always the indications of little minds incompetent to embrace large purposes or to anticipate great consequences. It was not foreseen that France could not only ward off these intended blows, but turn the weapon upon Britain herself.—Sheburne and Fox foresaw and forced the conversion of France into an armed people; that France would be forced into this position by necessity, and was competent to accomplish it—they were not believed.

The third consideration is the immediate operations of the effects of the continental system. The effects have been already felt by Great Britain. For a long time Napoleon's design of cutting off all trade between the continent and England, was frustrated by successive continental wars stirred up by the gold and intrigues of England; at the conclusion of the late coalition, the American flag had been employed to thwart by a scandalous abuse of the neutral character, the retaliatory or continental system; and notwithstanding all the boastings of Britain, as to her military and naval prowess, she has been compelled to stoop to a pitiful system of smuggling from Sicily, Malta and Heligoland, to the forgery of neutral papers and to other mean exertions in Spain, Portugal and Valcheren, to carry clandestinely her manufactures into the European continent. What do these facts prove—they have proved the potency of the "continental system" and the dread of its effects. Every stratagem has at last failed her, the American flag is no longer a cover for fraud, and the very ministry who undertook to out-law France are now forced, by permission of licensees from Napoleon, to trade to the continent upon his own terms; the British are glad to accept the surplus wine, brandy, oil and grain of France, and to give in return either raw articles essential to French manufactures, or even cash; they are even now alarmed at his denial of that permission—the balance of trade is therefore absolutely against them, and the dominating sovereignty of the seas are become the object of crawling sycophants of the power they affect to despise.

There are other effects also, which are produced by this system: France issues licences, and accepts through British bottoms the articles which France chooses to receive; but it confines the exportation of those articles to its own vessels, or vice versa, and thus it is raising with the knowledge and forced consent of England too, a body of seamen from whom it may look for the most momentous services. It is evident, therefore, that the British system of outlawry or blockades, has not answered the intended purposes, and that on the contrary it has produced a counteracting system, which has already had more than the anticipated consequences. The European continent has proven, to the disappointment of England, that it can do without England, and it has proven to our own sorrow that, by declining to maintain a lawful and innocent trade, in our own articles, to the continent of Europe, we are shut out of that trade altogether at present, and shall in all probability be shut out hereafter also: even the flag of the English enemy is now received when ours is forbidden—so much more respectable is an open enemy than a pusillanimous deserter of neutrality, of national honour and rights.

The fourth, and now most important consideration is the probable consequences in future. As the ends of Napoleon, therefore, have been as we see, far accomplished, as Britain herself has far accomplished that France shall have a trade (even during war) and a nursery for French seamen also; as Napoleon has made the continental system an imperial law, and has all Europe at his command to back it; and as we all know that as he has never yet abandoned any project that he has undertaken; on what grounds can any other issue be expected than that he will fully complete the intentions of the continental system, and release the commerce of the world from the shackles of monopolizing tyranny?

Such will, we make no doubt, be the result of a combination of military power and sound political arrangements; does it not then become us to enquire what may be the consequences to ourselves? We shall do so.

SIDNEY

Married, on Saturday evening last, by the Rev. Dr. O'Brien, Mr. Jonathan Ogden, to Miss Eleanor M'Can, both of this city.

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.

On Wednesday last, at the court of general sessions of the peace now holding in this city, came on the trial of Anthony Morales, calling himself "General Anthony Morales, charge des affaires and consul general of his majesty the king of Holland, residing near the government of the United States," on an indictment of obtaining by false pretences from William W. Rodman of this city the sum of forty dollars. The circumstances disclosed on the trial were, That some time in June last the prisoner came to lodge at the house of Mr. Dyde, where Mr. Rodman was then a lodger: That on the morning of his arrival he applied to Mr. R. for the loan of 40 dollars, representing himself to be charge des affaires and consul-general of the king of Holland; and that, having on his return from Washington been robbed by his servant of his trunk and money, he was in some difficulty, and requested the loan of the above sum until he could negotiate bills upon his government.—To support this representation, he produced to Mr. R. certain papers and documents in the Dutch language, but which Mr. R. did not understand. In consequence of this representation, he obtained the loan. A few days afterwards the falsity of his story was detected, and he was arrested for swindling.

In his defence, he produced a certain parchment, which was said to contain his appointment; but which on examination was found to be only a letter of credit in the name of the Batavian Republic, in favour of Mr. Anthony Morales, authorizing "his Honor" to draw on the Dutch government for such sums of money as he might think proper. He likewise produced an Exequatur issued by the President of the United States to him, recognizing him as consul general of the Batavian Republic, under which he had acted for about one month, when he was discovered to be an impostor, and the exequatur recalled. It was urged by the prisoner's counsel that this paper was genuine; that the paper itself was evidence of his being what he represented; and that, of consequence, as a foreign minister, he was privileged from prosecution for any offence short of treason: and to support this position, the counsel cited the law of nations.

The Court over-ruled this, and declared that the paper must be proved to be genuine, before it could be received as evidence. The prisoner not having done so, it must be rejected.

After an able defence by his counsel, Mr. Blake, and a very singular one by Doctor Graham, which were replied to by Mr. Colden, the district attorney, and a charge from the Court, the jury returned a verdict of GUILTY. An arrest of judgment has been made in behalf of the prisoner. [Merc Advs]

The subscriber was invested with the care and tuition of Osborn Prigg, a youth of about 16 or 17 years of age, 5 feet 10 inches high, very stout of his age, and his utterance slow and cautious. He left my school some time in June last, and I have strong reasons to believe by the pursuit of one John Kennedy, a native of New London, cross roads in the state of Pennsylvania, where perhaps they now are. Kennedy was employed by me a short time as an assistant in the school, and they both left the city on the same day. Any person having knowledge of the place of residence of the said Osborn Prigg will be addressing a line to me making it known, and in an act of the greatest humanity, inasmuch as it will enable his aged and tender parent to rest him from any further destruction.
